Le Droz, a Swiss watchmaker also executed very curious pieces of flying mechanism. One was a clock, presented to the king of Spain, which had, among other curiosities, a sheep that imitated the bleating of a natural one; and a dog watching a basket of fruit, which barked and snarled when any one attempted to lift it; besides a number of human figures, exhibiting motions truly surprising. One of the most celebrated mechanics in recent times was M. Vaucanson, of the Paris Academy of Sciences. In 1738 this gentleman exhibited to the academicians his celebrated flute-player, which was er on the flute, and which he executed in such a manner as to produce music equal in beauty to that derived from the exertions of a well practised living performer.

Some of Vaucason's other automata were still more ingenious than his fluteplayer. His mechanical performer on the pipe and tabor, constructed in 1741, was capable of playing about twenty airs, conof eating, drinking, and imitating exactly the voice of a natural one; and what is with the Austrians and their baggage and munitions in full retreat.
